The present juvenile system fails to punish and deter.

The lack of real punishment in the current system, with its focus on rehabilitation, fails to deter other potential offenders. The current system is ineffective in accurately deciding who is a juvenile offender and how best to address their issue. The system's approach is not focused on deterring future offenses but rather on rehabilitation.

Delivering real punishment, juvenile justice must be efficient and effective in addressing juvenile offenders.

Students who have been convicted of crimes must be provided with the possibility of parole. Convicted juvenile offenders, who have been convicted of crimes, must be given the opportunity to turn their lives around and be reintegrated into society.

The system must also provide for the rehabilitation of juvenile offenders. Programs must be developed to address the root causes of juvenile delinquency, focusing on education, counseling, and therapy.

Accomplish the goal of keeping children out of jail and providing them with the resources to succeed in life.

Make juveniles accountable for their actions and their parents responsible for their children.

Core Principles

Tell the difference: what stops juvenile offenders from becoming adults who can be arrested and held accountable for their actions.

Ensure that the system is fair and effective in protecting the rights of juvenile offenders.

The juvenile justice system must be reformed to protect our future.
